Sensor, camera and processor price drops have opened up the market for wider deployment of wireless networks called The Internet of Things. Intelligence is pushed closer to the edge. Web-based panels are managed from any web browser. Edge recording allows for decentralized video surveillance.

IoT represents the next generation of control networks for buildings and cities. Hundreds of millions of devices (cameras, alarms, readers, door phones, control panels, smart sensors) that operate on networks will be stitched together, easily and cost-effectively.

Thomas Lausten will discuss how IoT will affect the future of Intelligent Buildings, Intelligent Cities and Intelligent Highways. And how the IoT expands market opportunities for systems integrators and manufacturers.
